'Slow s on hous clean-u

EMPTY houses near the A329 relief road in Woodley are still in a "shocking mess" a month after Berkshire County Council promised to have them cleared up, a county councillor claimed yesterday.

Coun John Dawkins accused the county council of being slow to start the clean-up operation.

The vacant properties are mainly on the Coppice estate in Woodley, north of the Reading-Bracknell railway line.

"The county council has bought these houses over the past three years," said Coun Dawkins.

"When the time came for tenants to leave, they left a lot of rubbish around.

"Vandals and youths have been up their too. Almost all the windows have been broken. The place is in a shocking mess."

Coun Dawkins said he had had a dozen complaints from residents still living in the area of Burns Close, Kipling Close and Shelley Close. "The outlook is not very good for people still living there," he said.

"The county council has also been slow to start the boarding-up operation. It will take at least a month to complete."

Demolished

He said the county council had sent a letter to Wokingham Rural Council asking if it could assist with the clearing-up.

Coun Dawkins added: "The responsibility rests on the county council as owners. But I don't think Wokingham Rural Council has assisted much."

Some of the houses will be demolished later this year to make way for the relief road.

A spokesman for the county council said the reason for the delay in the boarding-up operation was that the work was put out to tender.

He appealed to the public to report any vandalism to the police immediately.

Mr Arthur Sutton, deputy clerk of Wokingham Rural Council, said a complaint was
